LITZENBERGER, CALGARY
JOCKEY GOES SOUTH

Jockey Edlie Litzenberger, an apprentice brought East by a friend of Calgary, will go South with the Rye, former steeplechase jockey and harness horse driver this winter. Mr. Ray took over the boy's contract for the winter months, and said his purpose was to give the lad a rest for some weeks, then take him to Miami for the winter racing. Mr. Ray said he did not intend to permit Litzenberger to do the same amount of work during the winter months that he had done during the fall, believing that the lad might be ruined by overwork, and that it would be much wiser to develop him slowly. He believes also that the boy has a brilliant future, during the Washburn, Long Branch and Dufferin Park meetings Litzenberger galloped horses in the morning and acted numerous mounts in the afternoon. Toward the close of the Dufferin Park meeting it became apparent that he was tiring, and on Friday he failed to land a mount, although every mount was placed by the judges.

White Litzenberger and his future was a topic of discussion among horse men and others, the value of jockey agents entered the conversation. A jockey's agent is probably an ex-rider or some other person connected with racing who, for a percentage of the riding amount, makes the jockey's engagements. On some courses it is claimed that agents, not content with the fee if they are making engagements for a promising boy, will insist on something extra for themselves if it so happens that several owners are bidding for the boy's services in any one race. By some racing associations the practice is condemned, but it is obviously difficult to stamp out.

Another interesting feature of a jockey's daily existence is that he is not only paid an agent to make his engagements, but money also goes to his valet, a lad who takes care of his personal effects. Consequently the $10 riding fee is whittled to a considerable extent, and the net result of a week's riding is not so large as it would appear from the report of the clerk of the scales.

BLIND MANAGER GUIDES
TEAM TO TWO PENNANTS

Bloomington, Pa.—Oscar Whitesell, believed to be the only blind baseball manager in the world has a good ear for baseball.

As a matter of fact Whitesell, who is totally blind, depends solely on his hearing to direct the plays of the Homestead nine, which he manages. And the last season was a successful one for his club.

With the assistance of his wife, Whitesell not only handles all the business end of the club, but directs all the plays when his team is in action.

The blind manager can be seen sitting along the third base line on automobile seat. His wife is seated on a folding chair by his side. She watches the plays and reports to her husband but he hands out the orders.

Once his wife has told him how the play has gone he never forgets and can always call the number on base and where they are. He follows all the plays closely and seems to start them in his mind. The replacement is quick made.

Whitesell, who has been blind since childhood, always has been a sports enthusiast. His interest, especially in baseball, won him the position of manager.

One would think that managing a baseball team, by ear, would take all of your time. But such is not the case with Whitesell.

He works in a general store which is conducted by his father. Here he waits on customers without difficulty. He knows the location of every article on the shelves.

He is a graduate of the Overbrook School for Blind and Homeopathic State Teachers college.

If anyone wishes to discuss sports, especially baseball, the blind manager always is ready to listen as well as to express his views—and he is well versed on any topic.

Heard on The Street :-

What an old story—
I will tell you. I was this and run down. I had several spells, there were black spots in front of my eyes at times and my hair kept coming out and would not stay combed. I did not get enough sleep. My karters kept slipping down. Frequently in rainy weather I could not find my umbrella. People would stop on my heels and my rubbers would come off. I felt dull after eating, and frequently found it necessary to have a drink of water. Just before meals I often felt weak and fatigued. I hated to go to bed at night and disliked to get up in the morning. I even hated to split wood for the kitchen fire. I felt that when my wife's mother came to visit us, and some times in the morning the coffee tasted like dish water. Then a friend suggested: Why don't you eat more 'sauer kraut'? I had never thought of that but followed his advice. Now I can shave with a broken bottle and rub my face with cayenne pepper. My hair does not come out any more, principally—for the reason that the last of it made its disappearance before I connected sauer kraut. My vision is clear and my breath is stronger, and I seldom open a gate any more. I jump the fence. Now I am the first one to go to bed at night and the last one to get up in the morning. For people who are run down at the heels like I was, I cheerfully recommend sauer kraut.

Johnny, said the minister, I'm shocked to hear you saying it. It is a very naughty habit. Why, every time I hear a person swear a cold chill runs down my back.

Woe said Johnny, if you'd been at our house last night when pop jammed his finger in the door, I guess you'd have trode to death.

One day Sir Walter Scott met a beggar on the street and the mendicant asked him for alms. Not having a shilling piece, the famous novelist gave the man a shilling, saying with a smile, Now, remember you owe me sixpence.

Sure enough, said the beggar, and God grant you may live till I pay you.

Mother—Johnny, why are you staring at the minister?

Johnny—Waiting to see him eat his head off like you said he would.

I knew it would happen. When a trained nurse gets to wait on a rich bachelor, it's all over but fixing the date.

A politician was called up at his office recently and notified that his wife had presented him with triplets. He was silent for a moment, and then bellowed forth, I demand a recount.

Has daddy finished dressing?
I don't think so, mummy, I heard him talking to his collar.

HOW MANY PEOPLE CAN GIVE EXPOSITION

What is Socialism? How many people can give a reasoned exposition of what is included in the belief of Socialism? There have been many explanations put forward including several by the Advocate. In the current issue of the Alberta Labor News, Elmer E Roper, editor of that interesting and informing weekly, gives his ideas in these words:

Most of the stupid arguments against the Socialist philosophy are based on simple ignorance of the realities of economic life. No person who understands the real nature of wealth production could, for example believe the old chestnut that Socialism means the dividing up of the wealth of the country among all the people so that all might have an equal share. Such an argument could only be based on the absurd presumption that wealth is a fixed and permanent thing that can be gathered in a heap and divided into so many million bits the heaps; that a rich class actually possess great wealth and that Socialists are long-haired bandits who wish to take it from them and give it to another class. Such a conception of wealth and such a conception of Socialism could only arise from an utter lack of knowledge of the processes by which wealth is created and distributed.

Roughly speaking there are two classes in society, the wage earning class to which may be placed the farmer, whether he knows it or not, and an owning class that lives on rent, interest and profit. It is true that there are exceptions and that it is easy to find wage earners who are limited owners of capital and small owners of capital who are wage earners. But these exceptions only prove the rule that for the most part the poor class of society live by wages and the rich class by owning. Now there are those who seem to imagine that the rich man possesses wealth, lives on that wealth, pays wages out of it to people he employs, and so on. But nothing could be farther from the truth. The fact is that the wage earner and the capitalist both derive their livelihood from the day by day wealth production of the world. And so the problem with which society is confronted is not a problem of one class possessing wealth and another not. It is rather a problem of the current distribution of wealth that is being produced from day to day by the application of labor to the natural resources and fertility of the country.

The rich man secures ownership of the natural resources of a country. But he does not live on these resources. He lives on wealth produced out of them by industry. A man may own capital, but he does not live on capital. He lives on wealth produced day by day by labor applied to his capital. Now we come to the very natural question, how is this new wealth, which is derived from the application of labor to natural resources and capital, distributed? Well to begin with, the owner of the means of production, the factory or mine, owns the products of the factory or mine. And having come into possession of this newly created wealth, the owner pays a portion of its value back to the worker whose labor brought it into being, in the form of wages. The amount so paid in wages is not considered to be a distribution of wealth, but a cost of production. Just as power and oil have to be supplied to machinery to keep it running so must the workman be supplied with food and clothing and shelter to keep him in working order. And with the exception that sometimes men by combination can get higher wages than the employer would otherwise pay, wages represent the minimum amount necessary to keep labor alive and working. And the surplus remaining after costs of production are provided for represents the net which the owner of the means of production takes from industry because of his ownership. And so we see it is not just the ownership of accumulated wealth as that causes our trouble. The real difficulty is with the unfair distribution of the current production of wealth that the private ownership of the means of production makes possible.

When a man inherits wealth from his father it is in effect not natural wealth that he inherits, but a right to draw on the wealth of the world as that wealth is being produced from day to day. It is the power by which he can compel other men to accept less than they produce and hand over the surplus to him. I have never heard a Socialist claim that a man should not be permitted to save, and thus to enjoy at some future time the accumulated leisure which his savings may represent. But it is an entirely different matter when he is permitted to use his savings to acquire ownership of the means by which other men live. Then he ceases to live upon his savings and begins to live by levying tribute on the labor of others. He begins to live on the difference between what labor can produce and what labor requires in order to live. His ownership enables him to extract this surplus from labor or for the maintenance of himself and his descendants for all time. It is this private control of the processes of production, which Socialism would remedy by cooperative ownership of the means by which men live. Socialism has nothing to do with taking wealth from one to give to another. Socialism, as I understand it, is a principle of national economic organization, through which social ownership of the means of production would make possible a larger and more equitable distribution of the wealth which may be produced from day to day.

MANY THANKS

A boy fell into a river and was in danger of drowning. A passing motorist heard his cries and plunged in to the rescue, ruining a fine suit in the process. The boy, on recovering, with a sense of gratitude asked the motorist's name, so that his father might adequately thank him. Tut, tut my boy, it's nothing, the motorist protested, but the boy being persistent, he gave his name and the hotel to which he was going. Sure enough the father turned up later in the day, dressed up for the occasion, and overbowed the motorist with his thanks. The motorist smiled his appreciation and held out his hand to the grateful father. It was a fine thing ye did, the latter exclaimed and hailing, he added, but what did ye do wif the boy's bonnet?

BOTH PARTIES CONTROLLED BY FINANCIAL INTEREST

Both the Liberal and Conservative parties are controlled by the financial interests, according to a statement of Mr. Woodworth in the Maclean's by election campaign, says The Winnipeg Free Press.

How does that square with the fact that the Liberal and Conservative parties are controlled by the financial interests that the corporation income tax has been increased and that a heavy tax is imposed on the personal incomes of wealthy persons? Is it why heavy inheritance taxes are imposed in the provinces? If the loan companies are among the financial interests that control Canada, as Mr. Woodworth says they are, why was the debt adjustment legislation passed by the western provinces?

The C. C. P. leader also said: The Liberals, when they stayed in power with so called progressive assistance, had been completely neglectful of the farmers interests.

Then who reduced the duties on farm implements, motor cars, textiles and other things so as to lower their cost to the farmer? And who maintained the low freight rates on grain by resisting the determined effort to abolish the Crooks' Nest rates? Who organized the rust research which has practically solved that problem?

At the same meeting at which Mr. Woodworth made the above statements, Mr. Stubbs made the sweeping assertion: If you are a Christian, you must be a Socialist.

There are many intelligent and honest people who do not accept the socialist doctrine but believe, rather, in improving the present system. These people cannot be Christians, even in the broad sense, according to Mr. Stubbs.

That is chiefly interesting as showing the mental attitude of those who believe that way. They have a monopoly of all truth, of all intellectual honesty. If you differ with them you are hopelessly wrong, setting from selfish,邪僻 motives, or adding those who do so.

There is an obligation on those who believe in improving the present system to use their influence in that direction. But it is futile for any Socialist spokesman to say that there is no choice for honest people but to accept the teaching of Socialism.

NIGHTINGALE

The Women's Institute of Nightingale held two very interesting meetings last month. The first was held at the home of Mrs. Ted McConnell on October 5th. The Roll Call was a verse of Thanksgiving and some beautiful thoughts were brought forth. Mrs. Steadley our Secretary read a letter from Mr. Abernethy regarding a lecture on the Douglas System. If possible at all there will be a lecture at the hall some time soon. A committee was appointed to make arrangements for a dance to be held soon. Mrs. Coops read a delightful paper on Festival Lays and a hearty vote of thanks was given. The afternoon was spent playing and carding wool for a new quilt.

The second meeting was held at the home of Mrs. Steadley on October 19. The Roll Call was Hints for First Aid and met with splendid response. Mrs. Thurston was welcomed to the institute as a new member. More work was done on the quilt and it was decided to sell chances along with the kets for the dance. No new business was introduced. Both meetings were well attended and help much with local social life.

Albert Kinnert was unfortunate to break his collar bone when he was thrown to the ground by the stamule of his pony.

Mr. Hilton, Sr. is making slow recovery from his recent illness.

Don Osmund and family left last Tuesday morning via Nightingale and Edmonton where he expects to make his home. We wish them well and a safe voyage.

Mrs. Hansen entertained, at a 6 o'clock dinner honoring Mr. and Mrs. Osmund.

Miss Gladys Tebb has been on sick leave the past week. Miss Grace Tebb of Aldrie is enjoying a visit at the teachers.

Cards have arrived announcing the birth of a son to Mr. and Mrs. O. B. Kirkwood of Irons. Mrs. Kirkwood (nee Miss Lofgren) was at one time the popular teacher at Valley Gardens school.
